SHOP AROUND THE CLOCK

Loree Rodkin

"My jewels appeal to rock stars because they're dangly and irreverent" says Loree Rodkin, who designs for Madonna, Mary J. Blige, Kelly Clarkson and Elton John. "Rock 'n' roll influences me because there are no rules," says the designer, whose standout pieces include pearl skull and cross bones wrist cuffs, and a solid white gold gun charm.
Rodkin, who often dons black leather and the boldest pieces from her collection, is practically a rock star herself in Japan, where she has numerous in-store shops, as well as a 3,000 square-foot boutique in Tokyo's cool Ginza neighborhood. Aesamith shop there when they're in town.

Last Art

When rock stars like Pink, Tammy Lee and Alicia Keys want, say, a peacock vest with a pair of snake-skin leather pants, they turn to Jordan Betton of Last Art. "They make all their custom leather by hand and it's the finest you can get," says stylist Harwood Lee, who has worked with Britney Spears and Ricky Martin. "They do beautiful, primitive, '70s Jim Hendrix kind of stuff." Lenny Kravitz owns the largest private collection of Last Art outside of their New York studio, which is only open by appointment.

Cowboy Cool

With a horseshoe-shaped sales counter, a crocodile carpet and retro décor, Dallas' Cowboy Cool is a haven for the urban rodeo warrior. Mixing traditional Western gear (cowboy hats, boots, belt buckles and button-down shirts) with a rock 'n' roll attitude ($2,200 Liberty skull boots anyone?), the West Village shop was founded in 2003 by Heath Calhoun, a former model/actor/personal trainer. Madonna, Kid Rock and Billy Bob Thornton have all shopped there.

Manuel Exclusive Clothier

Call it country couture. Stone-isle cowboys worship at the house of Nashville designer Manuel Cuevas, who was head tailor at Nudie's Rodeo Tailors in the '60s. The 73 year old has created over-the-top gear for Johnny Cash, Elvis Presley and Dolly Parton, and now counts country stars like Dwight Yoakam and Trisha Yearwood as clients. This year, he had his first show in New York City with the Manuel Limited Collection, featuring runway-meets-rouse denim, python and lots of leather. Custom designs start at around $5,000.
